Introduction

In this fun onomatopoeia game, students guess what makes the sound of different onomatopoeic words while attempting to bluff their classmates with false answers.

Procedure

Divide the students into groups of three.

Give each group a set of cards.

Students will also need a pen and paper for keeping score.

Ask the students to shuffle the cards and deal them out evenly.

Each card shows an onomatopoeic word in bold, a correct answer in bold, and an incorrect answer.

Without showing the group members, students add one more realistic incorrect answer to each of their cards to try to trick the other students.

When the students have finished, they take it in turns to read their cards to the group.

The student reads the onomatopoeic word and three possible answers for what makes that sound.

The other group members then take it in turns to guess which answer is correct.

Afterwards, the student reveals the correct answer.

If a group member guessed correctly, they score a point.

The card is then set aside.

The game continues until all the cards have been read out and guessed.

The student with the most points at the end of the game wins.
